

UNDERGRADUATE FELLOWS PROGRAM

CALL FOR PARTICIPANTS

Deadline: July 15, 2022

The Leadership, Diplomacy and National Security Lab (LDNS Lab) advances character-driven leadership, diplomacy, and national security education and training in support of the full range of university enterprises. Led by diplomatic and national security professionals, the LDNS Lab dedicates itself to learner-centered solutions and thought leadership through a global network of partners employing state-of-the-art learning tools.

The LDNS Lab is currently seeking two highly motivated undergraduate students to participate in its innovative Undergraduate Research Fellows Program for the Fall 2022 semester. Students accepted into the program will work directly with faculty mentors on current research projects involving leadership, diplomacy and national security and will qualify for a $2,500 scholarship.

Projects will range across a variety of disciplines, types of diplomacy, international leadership and national security settings. Students will devote approximately 5-7 hours per week to research assistance for faculty mentor(s). Activities may involve archival or bibliographic research, data collection, library or web searches, or other activities related to the mentors' research project.

Students will meet with faculty mentor(s) weekly via Zoom for 30-60 minutes to explore the dynamics of leadership, diplomacy and national security from a comparative and interdisciplinary perspective. This will provide an opportunity for students to read and discuss recent work on leadership, diplomacy and national security and to meet with leading ASU faculty working in this area.

When the students complete the Fellows program for Fall 2022 semester, they will receive a scholarship of $2,500. Scholarships are paid through the ASU Financial Aid Office. As a result, scholarships are first applied to university bills.
